Business law practitioners may not always consider addressing cybersecurity issues with their clients. However, collecting personally identifiable information can result in significant damages, making cybersecurity a major area of concern for businesses and the attorneys who counsel them.

Join our panel of experts as they discuss typical issues, including:

- General litigation claims that can arise in the cybersecurity context and what defenses are available to companies faced with these claims
- Preventative measures that can be implemented by companies to guard against cyberattacks from outside sources
- Insurance coverage issues arising out of the cybersecurity context
