Hunton & Williams LLP Unveils New Mobile-Responsive Labor and Employment Law Blog

Hunton & Williams is pleased to announce the release of its newly designed and mobile-responsive “HELP” Labor and Employment Law Blog, www.huntonlaborblog.com.

“Our HELP blog has served our clients as well as other segments of the entire labor and employment community — from companies and practitioners to international regulators,” said Gregory B. Robertson, who heads the firm’s labor and employment practice. “This new version of the HELP blog offers our readers easier and instant access to information in real time, more interactive features and the opportunity for greater analysis and comment on developments in the labor and employment field.”

Begun in November 2009, Hunton & Williams’ HELP Blog has become a go-to resource for news and analysis on labor and employment issues. The blog features information and legal commentary on a range of topics in the news, breaking US federal and state labor and employment legislation, recent court and regulatory decisions, and other news and analysis. The blog is managed by members of Hunton & Williams’ labor and employment team across the country.

Our labor and employment team has been active for over 70 years representing employers in all matters related to the employer/employee relationship. We represent clients in all industries, but have particular experience in retail, hospitality, financial, energy and health care. Though we are national in practice, our commitment is to provide excellent, prompt, cost-effective, team-based service as if it was always local. We regularly work with government agencies such as EEOC, OSHA and the OFCCP, and, where our clients already have represented employees, labor unions, to negotiate beneficial outcomes. However, we also litigate in almost every state in the nation including, for example, employment, labor, ADA and non-compete cases. We handle single plaintiff cases under creative fee arrangements and are one of the few firms that successfully tries class and collective actions to juries under Title VII and the FLSA. We are also particularly adept at providing strategic labor advice, handling complex NLRB matters, corporate and election campaigns.
